1. In early 1947 the Russians constructed a concentration camp in the forest near Lieberose (A49). Local residents were unable to learn anything about this installation until April 1947, when a drunken Russian soldier stated that "10,000 children" were confined there.
2. A woman resident of Lieberose, whose son had been missing since the Russian round-up of German adolescents in November 1945, visited the camp area every evening from mid-April to 24 May on the chance that she might see the boy. During the night of 24 May, the camp inmates were put aboard trains at a loading area near Lieberose. The missing boy was among the 2,000 persons in the third group of that size.
3. According to a German official who accompanied the shipment of prisoners, the trains went to Weimar.
